FIREMEN IN WRONG HOUSE. WON'T UPHOLD THE GAME LAWS

Blaze in Mr. Hatch's Residence Causes Excitement.

Magistrate Brann Is Incensed by Bird Seizure.

There was a small fire last night in the residence of Edward F. Hatch, No. 21 West Seventy-fifth street, which created an unusual amount of excitement. Mrs. Hatch retired to her room shortly after 11 o'clock and discovered that the curtains and woodwork in the dressing-room were ablaze.

She called her husband, who summoned the servants, and they promptly formed a bucket brigade and in a few minutes had the fire extinguished. One of the servants ran to the street and called Private Watchman Lenthien and Policeman Hughes, of the West Sixty-eighth street station, and they helped to carry the water.

An alarm was not turned in by the policeman. Someone on the street, however, turned in an alarm from Seventy-fifth street and an American avenue fire engine No. 41 was passing the Avenue apartment-house, at No. 231 Broadway, some one called to the firemen that the fire was in the apartment-house. The engine was stopped and a line of hose carried into the house.

Finally the firemen succeeded in convincing the firemen that there was no fire there and the hose was withdrawn and stretched two blocks down the street to where the fire was really located. By that time the fire had been extinguished.

Speaking of Summer

The summer, and the lessening bills For gas are signs that for the sun-kissed asphalt bears the prints Made by the hob-nailed boy. The night boat up the river runs Its course the mountains toward, And father's bustle for a find His family summer board. The piping frog has cleared his pipes.

But, inspired by the balmy atmosphere, we could keep on like this forever. It would not be literature, however, nor would it be to the point. For what we wish particularly to call your attention to is a little matter concerning a young woman who some day will be of great importance in more ways than one. She has already earned attention by the man—we mean womanly—way in which, brave in her convictions, she appeared in court recently ready to testify in a libel suit brought by that remarkably clever young Englishman against a certain defendant. Moreover, she is the only daughter of the richest woman in America, and is just entering society. How she entered it, through the careful tutelage of that unique chaperon, Miss Leary (whom every one knows), is really worth reading, and if you would know how it was done, as well as gain a little information which may be of great advantage to you in a similar case, you may now have the opportunity. These are times for learning things.

The reckless man behind the bat With agony is dumb. He would not wear a glove, and learned That foul tips break the thumb.

This is no more literature than the other, but it is in the way of information. So was a wonderful ride which a New York young woman took one day last week—Miss Zona Gale—when she achieved her ambition to be the first woman to run a steam locomotive through the city's streets. The sensations caused by this achievement were varied and interesting and worth reading. Equally interesting and much more thrilling was the experience of another New York girl, who swung at the end of a cable from the utmost peak of the new East River Bridge the other day, and writes of her marvellous experience.

Because you are my darling wife And I your only way or two When we're divorced, I pray that you Will pay my alimony!

What a strange request for a husband to make of his wife! Yet one has recently done it, and to such good effect that the courts have decided in his favor, and he is to receive a substantial amount each year from his spouse. Naturally, she objected, and said, making a "flat-footed" refusal. But what she said, never mind. The expression "flat-footed" reminds us that—

On the lawn the verdant grass Might as well be all uprooted. For Myrtilla, sad to say, Is remarkably flat-footed.

No disrespect to Myrtilla, for every New Yorker more or less is "flat-footed." It is a disease, one of the symptoms of "New-yorkitis," of which Dr. Girdner has written so entertainingly, and concealing which the Sunday World printed many interesting things last Sunday. That the "flat-foot" part of "New-yorkitis" is less an imagination than a reality an enterprising photographer has discovered during the passing week and will prove to your satisfaction.

I care not what I do, Though I may rob and murder, Or rob a house or church. Or go still even further. What boots it though a crowd Of witnesses cry "lawyer!" I cannot punish but For I've a clever lawyer!

So since a certain gentleman who ten long years ago committed a crime that was, to say the least, not gentle. He was sentenced to be hanged shortly after the commission of the crime, but as yet his neck is no longer than it was. Retrials, reprieves, commutations, retrials, reprieves, &c., &c., &c., over and over again, have crowded on each other and he is still alive. All due to his lawyer, who has exhibited an amount of brilliancy worthy a better cause. Who the lawyer is you may like to know. Who knows but you may need him some day? Also, the story of his client's offense is interesting.

Mac Swallen's brass are bonny, And Annie Laurie's sweet, The windows all are canny, Upon said "Thru's a string," The maid of Perth was fair, But every Scottish tribe, oh, Must wind the pipe and play the pibroch For the unto Laird of Skibo.

Sounds like Scotch, doesn't it? Or something. Anyhow, it's a means to introduce the fact that Andrew Carnegie, the richest man in America, who has just given New York City $5,000,000 and a little change, and contributed $10,000,000 to Scottish students' free lunches, is the lord of one of the biggest estates in the world, Skibo, Scotland, where he rules in absolute power over thousands of tenants. His philanthropy is being daily shown there, as it is everywhere else, and he is making a world's garden spot of the place. Newly taken photographs, with the Sunday World correspondent's account of his trip over the grand tract, illumine a page of next Sunday's World.

A rude mosquito bit her lip, But Julia whorled away, "Do not mind your mosquito, Julia, I do not dread your bite, because You don't believe by nature's laws, The genus Anophele!"

Julia knew her book. Maybe the mosquito's bite stung her, but it wasn't poisonous, so Julia was not afraid that her lips would swell out like a knob on a hat-rack. You ought to know about mosquitoes, too. Also that Uncle Sam is driving them out of the country and that there won't be any pretty soon. Jerseyites, please take particular notice!

They laid her down on a red-hot bed, And they took her skin for a rug. And a couple of knives, and an sugar sharp. And they cut and they drilled her through. And they peeled the skin from her wrinkled face. And they tortured her with their tricks. But when they got through she was twenty-two instead of forty-six.

So she didn't care. Face-skinning, the process through which Mrs. Langtry recently went so as to regain the bloom of youth, is about as bad as the operation observed in the foregoing stanza. But if it makes a woman beautiful, what cares she for the pain? Harriet Hubbard Ayer shows by photographs how the awful operation is performed, and every woman should note the process carefully.

These and some other you'd like To read in certain for to strike Where everything of interest Is found, all times the very best! Stories of love, sweet as a bird's From lovers' tales of war unfurled, Scenes of romance, poems which thrill, Pictures, and humor, such as curled Your hair with laughter—when you've twined A nickel for

PAUPER GRAVE HIDES MYSTERY

Nobody Claims Body of Pretty Woman Found in River.

The body supposed to be that of the pretty woman who jumped from the Pennsylvania ferryboat Hudson City April 17, off Jersey City, which was found in the river this week, was buried today in Potter's Field, New York.

Morgue-keeper Speer had tried for nearly a week to secure some clue that might lead to the mysterious woman's identification.

"In all my experience," said the morgue-keeper today, "I have never met a case so completely shrouded in mystery."

The woman was fashionably dressed, and was evidently of refinement. She was about twenty-five years old, and wore a Gainsborough hat, brown tailor-made suit, and had brown wavy hair.

Just before she jumped into the river she read several letters, wept over them, and tore them up.

One of the envelopes bore the address of Mrs. M. Farrell, of No. 226 East Ninety-fifth street.

Mrs. Farrell, just before going to Europe, said she knew no woman such as the suicide was described to be. Mrs. Farrell's relatives have not called to see the body.

KNOCKED DOWN BY CAR.

John Russell Severely Injured in Accident on West Broadway.

John Russell, of No. 33 Market street, was knocked down by a Bluff automobile car at West Broadway and severely injured. He was rendered unconscious, and his ribs were fractured. He was taken to the Hudson hospital, where he is now lying.

REVOLUTIONIST BRACHI HERE.

Santo Domingan Who Made Trouble for the Government.

Gen. Jose Brachi, of Santo Domingo, by occupation an unsuccessful leader of revolutions, arrived in New York on the steamship Cherokee.

Gen. Brachi is not here of his own volition. He came at the earnest request of President J. F. Jimenez and the members of his cabinet, who have been kept in a cold sweat by the persistence of Gen. Brachi in stirring up opposition in the vicinity of the palace.

The swarthy General, who is located at the Hotel Muro, in Fourteenth street, owes his life and a first-class passage from Santo Domingo to the fact that his brother is Minister of Finance.

Several months ago Gen. Brachi stepped into the public square at Santo Domingo, fired a pistol, shouted "Carmichael" and a revolution was on.

Brachi was brave and persistent in troubling the Government party until it was up to Jimenez to do something.

He organized the movement which ten days ago resulted in the capture of the revolutionary leader near Santiago Las Vegas. Preparations were made to perform him in the public square for the edification of the people, but the influence of the Minister of Finance prevailed and Brachi was deported.

Any revolution that needs a first-class and experienced leader can negotiate with Brachi, for he is out of a job.

Dead Queen's Fatal Day.

LONDON, May 24.—There was a general observance of former Queen Victoria's birthday today. The Law Courts and Government offices were closed and the pupils of the various schools had a holiday. There were the usual ringing of bells and the firing of salutes at Windsor and at the military and naval stations. There were special observances of the day in Australia at the Cape and in India.
